Sinar has developed a gear bench holder for its view cameras for digital imaging technology, which greatly facilitates the exact positioning of the camera for still life images and reproductions. The compact gear bench mount is designed so that the camera can be rotated steplessly around the longitudinal axis of the bench. By turning the operating handle, the camera can be brought into the desired position. The self-locking precision gear thereby holds the camera in the set position without an additional locking screw. The set position can be read off a scale and can thus be found again quickly. Two bench extensions are required to operate the geared tilter.
